

Work Study

Both the federal and state College Work-Study programs provide jobs on campus for undergraduate students with demonstrated financial need who must or prefer to work while in school in order to meet their educational expenses. Work hours are flexible and generally fit the student's class schedule. Students will be paid the prevailing minimum wage once monthly. Each work-study student will be awarded an amount that cannot be exceeded. Once the student's award has been earned, employment is terminated. Employment thru the work-study program does not make the student eligible for unemployment compensation when the job is terminated and/or the school term ends. To be eligible for the work-study programs the Student must be enrolled at least half-time, show financial need, and be eligible to work in the United States. Eligible students should apply for the work-study program by completing an application for work-study employment in the Financial Aid Office. Job openings are posted in the financial aid office. The student is responsible for scheduling interviews with supervisors of jobs in which they are interested.
